The "Sensory Sanctuary" grant is being implemented through a multi-phase approach focused on student well-being and academic success. I have procured core sensory equipment, including a popular spinning chair that provides students with essential fidgeting and movement breaks to support self-regulation. To expand the project's impact across the entire school community, I am partnering with our school counselor to acquire additional sensory supplies and tactile objects. This collaborative effort will transform the sensory room into a shared resource where all students can access mental breaks and use tactile tools to enhance focus and emotional regulation before returning to their classrooms. This school-wide approach maximizes the grant's benefits by creating equitable access to sensory supports that help students manage stress and improve academic engagement.
